

Dean Peters is a retired publishing executive from the business-to-business media sector, where he was editor of a number of magazines covering manufacturing and metalworking industries including metal casting, metal forging, welding and industrial gases, and heat treatment. In addition to his editorial duties, he has written numerous analytical research studies on a variety of diverse industries ranging from oil and gas exploration to recreational boating. He also has written feature articles that have appeared in an assortment of business publications.

Dean is an alumnus of the Stevens Institute of Technology (B. Eng. in Metallurgy) and Case Western Reserve University (MBA). He became an Ohio resident in 1974 when he and his wife, Heidi, were married at Sts. Constantine & Helen Greek Orthodox Cathedral (Cleveland Heights, OH), where he and Heidi and daughter Magdalene (Maggie) are active parishioners. Dean's paternal and maternal families both hail from the Dodecanese island of Castellorizo (Megiste), Greece. As a Cleveland resident for most of his life, Dean enjoys the high culture-per-capita ratio that Cleveland offers. In his spare time Dean enjoys playing his various stringed instruments (mostly guitar), reading, golfing, and cycling.
